Faith Community Nursing

A wellness program to assist all faith communities.

Sponsored by:

What is a Faith Community Nurse (FCN)?

Faith Community Nurses are Registered Professional Nurses trained in health maintenance, disease minimization and prevention, and spirituality within their faith tradition. FCNs combine their ministry with the art and science of nursing; bringing the link between faith and health to fruition.

A Faith Community Nurse

...will NOT perform direct or hands-on care to their faith community members

...will act as a health educator, a health counselor, a health advocate, a referral agent, and a coordinator/facilitator within their faith community.

FCN is recognized as a specialty practice by the American Nurses Association requiring knowledge and experience in both professional nursing and spiritual care.

Why participate in a Faith Community Nurse program?

Churches are and have always been places of healing. Faith Community Nursing reaffirms the churches' role in ministering to the whole person: mind, body, and spirit.

Even though this ministry is grounded in the Judeo-Christian tradition "to preach the kingdom of God and to heal" (Luke 9:2), we believe and know that many faith traditions have a link in their beliefs to the health and care of the believer. That is the position where FCN will assist; ensuring that the whole individual, group, and community are supported.

What are the goals of this type of ministry?

The goal of this type of health ministry is to:

- Enhance and increase the quality of life, through improved whole person health and spiritual well-being within the faith community and the community for with it resides
- Support the health and healing already present within the culture of the faith community
- Promote whole person wellness and prevention
- Endorse individual(s) quest to be in command of their own healthcare

Why does Catholic Health offer the FCN program?

Catholic healthcare is guided by four normative principles of social responsibility:

1. to promote human dignity
2. to care for the poor
3. to contribute to the common good
4. to be responsible stewards of available resources

Catholic Health is committed to embracing the whole nature of the individual: body and mind, social and spiritual – where they are – enhancing their existence.
